

A WEDDING POEM FOR GREG AND TERI SEVERINE

by Barbara Larkin

Your Wedding Day, August 5, 1989, is a special day
For you, Greg and Teri, as you make your way
Through life's journey of pleasures and sorrows
For, as husband and wife, you will share your tomorrows

While Marty and Carol Severine were raising their boy
To be the kind of a man who would bring Teri joy
Bob and Barbara Larkin, their daughter did raise
For Greg to cherish for the rest of his days

August 5, 1989 is special in more ways than one
The Severines have a new daughter and the Larkins, a son
We are one happy family as we gather together today
To witness the occasion of your Wedding Day

My advice for you as your life together begins
Is to always be there for each other, the best of friends
To find happiness in ordinary everyday pleasures
To treat each other's dreams as if they were treasures

To support each other when the other has plans
Different from yours or out of your hands
Even if those plans sometimes seem foolish at best
Those are the things that put a marriage to the test

To weather the storms, you must work as a team
Sharing each victory as well as each dream
From this day forward, till death do you part
May you walk hand in hand...but always follow your heart
